District Judge Holds That Government Failed to Prove Any Restraint of Trade

Bible Words

for Today

There came to my study a few years ago an all American football player who said, "I want to get right with God. I am not satisfied." In his heart and mind was confusion, frustration, turmoil and a deep sense of his need of God. Truly this young man was a picture of life devoid of peace, serenity and spiritual happiness.

After speaking with him about his condition and how he might be placed in the proper relation to God. I referred to the peace that is implanted in one's heart as a result of true repentance and acceptance of Christ as Savior and Lord. How thrilling it was to share with him in prayer as he poured out his heart to God and humbly accepted Jesus and became a recipient of His peace.

Disregarding loose theories to the contrary, men have been roaming this earth for about 6,000 years.

WASHINGTON-The more you study what went on behind the scenes in the McCarthy debate the more you reach the unfortunate conclusion that it resembled what took place in prewar Germany. And the better it is to have it terminated.

What fed the McCarthy controversy were ominous undertones of religious prejudice. And though the public phase of the debate fortunately has ended, the seeds of intolerance, recently unlossed, may continue - unless the American people were alert to scotch them.

Significantly, Ludwell Denny, able foreign editor of the Scripps-Howard newspapers, cabled from Bonn this week that "the religiouspolitical strife which helped Hitler is rising again." He goes on to pin-point Catholic-Protestant rivalry, plus anti-Jewish feelingall playing into Communist hands.

That should not happen here.

But to a lesser extent, it did happen during the McCarthy debate. Southern senators from Protestant states received vitriolic letters from northern Catholic areas berating their position on McCarthy. The letters, of course, represented but a small segment of the Catholic faith.

Furthermore, most Catholic senators were against McCarthy. Men like Murray and Mansfield of Montana, O'Mahoney of Wyoming, Burke of Ohio, all Catholic, voted their conscience and were against McCarthy. They represent the great majority of Catholics who believe that religion and politics must not mix, and who follow the time-honored Catholic doctrine of brotherly love. But the prejudiced group that bombarded Washington with the idea that Mc-Carthy was being censured because of his religion were so vocal that it hurt the cause of religious tolerance.

Anti-Semitism Simultaneously, Gerald L. K. Smith, from a secret hiding place in Washington, began pouring a poisonous propaganda barrage into the bloodstream of American politics.

Incidentally, it was not my intention, in recently reporting that Rabbi Benjamin Schultz had "joined forces with" Smith in defending McCarthy, to mean that he had physically and personally joined Smith; but rather that he had joined the political forces and groups defending McCarthy. Though Rabbi Schultz came to Washington while Smith was here, I am sure he would never associate himself with Smith's vicious anti-Jewish attacks. Here, for instance, is an illustration of how Smith used McCarthy to attack the Jews.

In a fervent, clever appeal for money, dated Nov. 23 and captioned "Still in Washington Tough Battle," Smith poured out this poison. "Five million dollars are available to the forces that are determined to destroy Senator McCarthy by murder, character assassination, removal from the Senate - anything to make sure that the treason committee against our nation never will be uncovered." (Unfortunately, Monsignor Martin in New York had stated earlier that $5,000,000 had been raised to destroy McCarthy.)

"Because of Congress and a few courageous men in both houses," Smith continued, "the conspirators who originally designed this Fabian bureaucratic alien-minded, Jew-financed dictatorship-yes, because of a handful of fighting patriots, they have been unable to set up the complete controls over your life and mind, as they originally planned. "When I came to this city," Smith continued, "I registered at a certain hotel under the name of an employee. I gave no one my hotel address. The second Sunday I was here, Drew Pearson announced where I was, including the room number of Mrs. Smith and myself.

Fulton Lewis Says No This is a flat denial of a broadcast by Fulton Lewis, the radio champion of Senator McCarthy, who has sometimes lent himself to the operations of Gerald L. K. Smith.

Reading at length from my column of Nov. 17, Fulton, Jr., correctly quoted me as reporting: "Smith registered as Stephen Goodyear in Room 1017 of the Mayflower Hotel."

Then Fulton continued: "I had a firsthand interest and sympathy, and let us say, curiosity about this Drew Pearson column. . . . As a result I did a little reportorial checking on my own responsibility. "The records of the Mayflower Hotel show that a Stephen Goodyear was registered in a Room 1017 on Wednesday of last week and that he gave a Tulsa, Okla., address. . . . "Mr. Lewis told his radio audience.

"I placed a long distance call to Mr. Stephen Goodyear at the Tulsa address under which he was registered, found that no telephone was listed. I then called the police department in Tulsa, found out that there were several telephones listed nearby. I called one of them. The lady to whom I talked said there was such a person as Stephen Goodyear and that she would try to reach him and have him call back.

"In about an hour he did so, informed me that he was registered in Room 1017 at the Mayflower Hotel as of last Wednesday. So," triumphantly concluded Mr. Lewis, "the registration of Stephen Goodyear was his own registration and not any assumed name."

However, if my old friend Fulton had checked a little further he would have found, as Gerald L. K. Smith himself reported, that he did register under an assumed name; further he would have found, as I did, that the bill for Room 1017 was paid by "E. M. Smith," who is Gerald's wife. In addition he would have found that phone calls for Smith at Room 1017 were being taken in Room 1008, which was occupied by Smith's secretary, Miss Renata Le Gant.

This type of routine news checking right here in Washington would have saved Fulton a lot of long distance phone calls and bothering Goodyear's neighbors down in Tulsa to call him to the phone. It's the type of news checking I tried to teach Fulton when he worked for me many years ago. Fulton would have also found, if he had checked a little further, that the use of Stephen Goodyear's name is an old dodge by Gerald L. K. Smith. On May 26, 1953, for instance, Smith announced in his confidential news letter that his followers should ask for him under the name "Stephen Goodyear" at the Willard Hotel in Washington in order to attend a secret meeting of the Citizens Congressional Committee.

Theer are some additional things Fulton could have found out, if he had done a little routine checking instead of bothering the police in Tulsa and spending a lot of money on the long

Educational Revolution

By Bruce Biossat

A quiet revolution, accompanied only by the hum of the motion picture projector, is under way in the nation's schools.

Educational films, once as much of a novelty as an entertaining commencement address, today are becoming a staple in countless classrooms across the country. Most of their mushrooming growth has occurred since World War II.

Though what the educators call audio-visual education is now 25 years old, it was the war which gave these techniques their big push toward wide use in schools. Millions of men had to be taught in a hurry—and taught well. So films were heavily and successfully relied

The experience evidently was an eye-opener to educators. In fast-growing states like California, the movie projector proved a lifesaver. In many others, its value became increasingly Educational authorities came to regard films not as a lunchtime treat or an occasional supplement to the schooling process but as an integral part of teaching. Some undoubtedly would go so far as to say an indispensable part.

There seems no doubt of the teaching effectiveness of sound films when they are widely used. They need only to be fitted naturally and easily into the regular course of instruction. In some fields other methods of instruction could not possibly match the visual treatment.

Today's films range over such varying topics as atomic energy, constitutional checks and balances, Newton's experiments with gravity, the workings of the inner ear, how the laws of heredity operate, and so on.

Acually, there aren't enough film prints available in most cases to meet the swelling demand. Big city school systems can exhaust the supply quickly. Some states and cities have libraries from which schools can rent films. But a more satisfactory practice seems to be the growing habit of pooling film resources of five to ten schools to permit more frequent showings of the most useful pictures.

An affiliate of Encyclopedia Britannica makes about 70 films a year, more than any single Hollywood studio, and it now has a catalogue of more than 750. But these and other efforts still fall short of filling the market.

If the judgments of our best professional educators are good, then this clamor for educational films is just about the healthiest thing that has hit the schools in many a day. Particularly at a time when the nation's school system suffers from too many inadequately trained teachers, the value of expertly produced films is abundantly clear.

Funds for improvement of the schools aren't easy to come by these days. But, whatever new money can be turned up, some of it ought to find its way into expansoin of educational films. They're making some of the most cheerful news to be found in our hard-pressed classrooms today.

Pretty Home Is Nice, But Women Want Livable House

By Ruth Millett

There's a grandmother in Pennsylvania who turned home builder four years ago and has already made a fabulous success in the construction business because she is a woman and knows what women want in a home.

It's too bad there aren't more women in the home-building field.

For the men seem bent on giving us all the fancy extras, and almost none of the real necessities, for today's living in the homes they design and build to sell.

Just yesterday I went through a model home, complete with many baths, swimming pool, air conditioning, etc.

Gadgets Aren't Answer But while it was a pretty picture and could easily have graced the cover of a home-decorating journal ,this expensive home had no place

Children to play on a rainy day or for Papa to set up a power tool or two. No place for any member of the family to get away from the rest of the household and the television set to read in peace and quiet. No place to store all the equipment a growing family accumulates through the years, such as guns, fishing tackle, baseball bats and tennis racquets, golf clubs and the high chair that is waiting around for a new customer.

There was a patio in back, but no place for the neighborhood gang to play baseball or football. A beautiful, terraced lawn, but only a cubbyhole for storing all the necessary equipment for keeping it up.

And whatever the price, that is the trouble with most of the houses that are being built to sell these days.

They are full of gadgets, but short on livability. And unless more women get into the construction business, they're likely to go on being that way.

Communist Justice

Much mystery surrounds the case of the longmissing Noel Field and his wife, who disappeared behid the Iron Curtain in 1949. Without attempting to judge Field in any way, we can see in his treatment a beautiful example of the workings of Communist justice. According to the Hungarian radio, which announced his release, Field had been arrested on spy charges Quite matter-of-factly, as if he had spent no more than a weekend in jail, Hungary now says the charges have been dropped because they could not be "justified."

Five years is a long time to keep a man waiting while it is determined that he shouldn't

The story may be much more complex than appears on the surface. But if the reality is anything like the present appearance, this is one of the weirdest demonstrations in the weird record of alleged Communist justice.

CRAIN was puzzled, but he had learned long ago to conceal uncertainty. "This brought you back to New York?"

"In a way. What I'm after is someone to sponsor a telecast of the Grand Opening, with Philip Kirby acting as M.C. With his publicity and current popularity we'd have the whole country watching that show. But that's just part of a bigger picture, of course. I've been thinking a lot about a new television program based on American folklore, using the opening of Dead Man's Gulch as the first shot of the campaign."

"American folklore," Crain said thoughtfully.

Greg pushed aside his coffee cup and leaned forward. He was so absorbed in his idea that he was only vaguely conscious of Crain. "Look," he said eagerly, "no one is really selling America these days. It's a tremendous field with excitement and glamor."

Crain studied him with more interest than he had ever displayed. "Who's idea is this?" "Partly mine," Greg said. "Partly a guy who's traveling with us, fellow with a real flair for selling." "You know," Crain said unexpectedly. "In a lot of ways you are quite changed."

On the contrary, it was Crain who had changed. There was nothing particularly forbidding about him; just a harmless, cautious guy trying to make a buck, Greg thought.

"This man Daggett-" Crain pushed back his chair and lifted his liqueur glass absently, set it down again-"seems to have made quite an impression on you."

To his amazement, Greg realized that Crain was a trifle icalous. His stepfather really minded that someone else had so much influence on him.

"I've learned a lot from him," Greg said, and knew that it was true. "He's understanding and-I don't know-mellow, I guess, is as good a word as any. "Your mother has always Daggett read the telegram aloud to Kirby, Rupert and Hannah. Then he leaned back on his pillows and laughed. Rupert sat looking at the open door of heaven. Kirby danced Hannah the length of the bedroom and then led her outside.

"Now that I'm on the payroll again, I've got something to say to you." His puckish face was more sober than she had ever seen it. "I want to marry you, Hannah. I can give you an interesting life with a lot of glamor in it, if you want glamor; and plenty of domesticity, if that's what you want. I'd do my best." Tentatively his arms went around her. "You're the sweetest thing I ever saw and I love you very much."

Hannah slipped out of his embrace and for a moment the radiance in her face misled him. "Thank you," she began and Kirby's impudent nose wrinkled with amusement. "You're welcome," he assured her.

"I mean-thank you for telling me you love me. It's a great deal to know a man can love "How about you?"

She shook her head. "I can't Philip. I can't." "Is it Seaver?" She nodded. Kirby studied her face. "I would," he said bitterly, "pick out a girl who doesn't want me. At least-if you ever change your mind, I'll be waiting."

VIXXX RUPERT eased the car past the Dead Man's Gulch. He stopped, savoring Greg's expression. The place was no longer a ghost town. It was alive; it was real. Along the road clattered cowboys on horseback, men and women swarmed the boardwalks.

"Where did you get the extras?" Greg asked at last, his eyes on some synthetic cowboys. Judging by the way they bounced, riding was a new and painfully acquired art to these sons of the rugged West.

"Members of the Chamber of Commerce. They got here before the cooks did and Hannah was feeding the whole outfit before she left-"

There was a hollow feeling in the pit of Greg's stomach. "Hannah's gone? Rupert's narrow eyes brushed his face. "Several days ago." Greg left him with a muttered excuse about seeing Daggett. The latter lay in bed with his eyes closed. Thinking he was asleep, Greg was tiptoing out when the old man said, "Have a good trip?"

"Fine. How have you been behaving?" Greg's voice was casual but he was alarmed. Weeks had passed since Daggett decided to take things easy. He should have seen a doctor long ago. It was not like Hannah. "Having the time of my life." Daggett's big vibrant voice reassured Greg. "You seem to have slain your giant." Greg grinned. "At least, I tamed him." For the first time he realized that, by signing a three-year contract with his stepfather he had withdrawn from his job with Daggett. Like gett at all. "I hope," the old man said cheerfully, "Crain kicked through with a decent salary." "Terrific. The queer part is that I never dreamed of getting a job for myself out of this,"

DAGGETT interrupted hastily, "You'd be a god-awful fool if you hadn't jumped at it. Otherwise you'd have been out of a

"But-" "An adventure in spring at my time of life is something. It's only common sense to know when to let spring go. God be with the clown who ponders this tremendous scene, this whole experiment in green, as if it was his own. I don't have to own it. For 50 years, after this-" and he touched his shriveled hand-"happened to me, I've been trying to get back to the time and place when I was whole. And you made it possible. Gave me a second spring. But no one can escape indefinitely from his own time and place. In the long run, you have to let the madness go with the spring. It takes four seasons to make a year."

"You'll need someone." "When Hannah gets back, we'll talk things over. Unless she marries Philip Kirby, of course. And he's a persistent fellow in a nonaggressive sort of way. Right now he's using smart tactics, shows he understands the wench. He's not putting pressure on her, he just looks unhappy." "Where's Hannah?" Greg was righteously indignant. "If I had dreamed that she would walk out on you-" "She is doing an errand for me. She'll be back in time for the Opening." She'll be back for the Grand Opening, Daggett had said. Back tomorrow. But where was she tonight? Who was she with? What was she doing? As he left Daggett, Greg found himself smoldering at the thought of Philip Kirby. Kirby knew Hannah all right, appealing to her pity, making her sorry for him. She'd probably end by marrying him. Well, why not? He was famous, he'd be making a fabulous salary, he'd be able to give a woman everything she wanted. Of course, she'd marry him.

Where was Kirby anyhow? You'd think, as a matter of simple gratitude, as a common courtesy, he'd be on hand to say thank you to the guy who had landed him a juicy contract. Unless he was with Hannah.

BUT Kirby wasn't with Hannah. He emerged from a group of photographers and came running toward Greg, his hand

"Seaver! I didn't know you were back. You really pulled it off! Let me buy you a drink to celebrate." As soon as he had finished his drink Greg made his escape. As he went across the road to the Last Chance Hotel the stagecoach and covered wagon were setting off for the station to pick up the first of the crowd. Daggett turned his head as Greg came in and "It was a nice holiday," Daggett said at last. "It's over for you now. You've a big job ahead, but one that's worth doing. Reminding Americans of their heritage. Now and then, I suppose, you'll still find yourself looking for the other side of the moon. But the oxygen is rare, they say. Along the road kerosene lamps were lighted. A horse stamped. Footsteps died out. Everyone was tired. They had done the best they could. There was nothing now but to wait for the morning train and the Grand Opening.

A voice rose softly, the voice of the Badlands, the wind that blew over the prairies and bluffs, coming from nowhere, from the other side of the moon. (To Be Continued)

LINCOLN TAKES FIRST AND SECOND PLACES IN OPEN STOCK CAR CLASS—OUTPERFORMS ALL COMPETITION IN 1,908-MILE RUN!

Lincoln wins again! For the third consecutive year, Lincolns dramatically proved beyond doubt their performance superiority over America's most powerful cars by winning both first and second places in the Open Stock Car Class of the fifth annual Mexican Pan-American Race.

More than 30 cars began the tortuous 1,908-mile border-to-border endurance race over Mexico's rugged terrain. Driving conditions ranged from twisting mountain roads to high-speed plateau straightaways-from near sea-level to more than 10,000 feet. When the winning Lincolns streaked across the finish line at Ciudad Juarez, they had written, for the third time, a spectacular new record of superior stamina, power and durabilitythe impartial evidence by which Lincoln has been judged the most roadworthy American motor car of all time.

And this world-acclaimed performance can be yours, in even finer measure, in a 1955 Lincoln. You command America's finest power combination in Lincoln's new highperformance V-8 engine teamed with Turbo-Drive, the smoothest, most responsive transmission ever engineered into a modern motor car. Improved ball-joint front suspension provides even greater ease of handling and steering control. And Lincoln's incomparable new beauty creates a brilliant complement to this advanced edition of magnificent driving.
